He was born in 1959 at St. Joseph's Hospital and spent his early years at St. Catherine, St. Margaret Mary and St. Boniface Parishes. He spent three years at St. Lawrence High School in Mt. Calvary, and graduated from Beaver Dam High School. After attending college in Milwaukee, he worked in the accounting field for eight years. He also served as the secretary-treasurer of this St. Gregory VII Chapter from 1983 until 1986, when he entered the Pontifical College Josephinum. He graduated from the Josephinum with a degree in Philosophy.

He then attended Mount St. Mary's Seminary in Emmitsburg, Maryland, for theology and was ordained to the Priesthood May 15, 1993 for the Diocese of Arlington. After serving at St. Michael's and Sacred Heart of Jesus Churches, he was assigned, in 2000, to St. Mary's Church in Old Town, Alexandria where he was named pastor in 2004. ## “Catechetical Corner” What is meant by the term, “Sacred Tradition?”

Sacred Tradition is the unwritten word of God given by Christ through the Holy Spirit to the Apostles and handed down to their successors. Before the New Testament was written down it was transmitted orally and was part of Sacred Tradition. Sacred Tradition is revealed in the creeds, liturgy, prayers of the Church, and the authentic teachings of the Popes and Bishops.

Book of the Month: The Seven Deadly Sins

Author: By Kevin Vost, PSY.D.

Publisher: Sophia Institute Press, 2015

“If you want to make progress in the spiritual life, you must know your enemy. Best-selling author Kevin Vost shines a light on the seven deadly sins, showing how they take root in our souls and keep us from being raised to heaven.

In these pages, Dr. Vost unpacks the teachings of St. Thomas Aquinas – history’s greatest theologian – in an engaging and accessible way. He unveils the hidden connections between common sins and shows how each gives birth to daughters – other thoughts and deeds that help it reach its sinful goals. We all struggle with the seven deadly sins to varying degrees. Read this book, and you’ll walk away armed with an arsenal of practical weapons to combat these sins and to clear the path for greater virtue, deeper happiness, and more profound union with God.”

“The Left Has Its Pope”

by Thomas Sowell
Real Clear Politics
September 22, 2015

Pope Francis has created political controversy, both inside and outside the Catholic Church, by blaming capitalism for many of the problems of the poor. We can no doubt expect more of the same during his visit to the United States. Pope Francis is part of a larger trend of the rise of the political left among Catholic intellectuals. He is, in a sense, the culmination of that trend. There has long been a political left among Catholics, as among other Americans. Often they were part of the pragmatic left, as in the many old Irish-run, big city political machines that dispensed benefits to the poor in exchange for their votes, as somewhat romantically depicted in the movie classic, “The Last Hurrah.”

But there has also been a more ideological left. Where the communists had their official newspaper, “The Daily Worker,” there was also “The Catholic Worker” published by Dorothy Day. A landmark in the evolution of the ideological left among Catholics was a publication in the 1980s, by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, titled “Pastoral Letter on Catholic Social Teaching and the U.S. Economy.” Although this publication was said to be based on Catholic teachings, one of its principal contributors, Archbishop Rembert Weakland, said: “I think we should be up front and say that really we took this from the Enlightenment era.”

The specifics of the Bishops’ Pastoral Letter reflect far more of the secular Enlightenment of the 18th century than of Catholic traditions. Archbishop Weakland admitted that such an Enlightenment figure as Thomas Paine “is now coming back through a strange channel.”

Strange indeed. Paine rejected the teachings of “any church that I know of,” including “the Roman church.” He said: “My own mind is my own church.” Nor was Paine unusual among the leading figures of the 18th century Enlightenment. To base social or moral principles on the philosophy of the 18th century Enlightenment, and call the result “Catholic teachings” suggests something like bait-and-switch advertising. But, putting aside religious or philosophical questions, we have more than two centuries of historical evidence of what has actually happened as the ideas of people like those Enlightenment figures were put into practice in the real world – beginning with the French Revolution and its disastrous aftermath. Both the authors of the Bishops’ Pastoral Letter in the 1980s, and Pope Francis today, blithely throw around the phrase “the poor,” and blame poverty on what other people are doing or not doing to or for “the poor.”

Any serious look at the history of human beings over the millennia shows that the species began in poverty. It is not poverty, but prosperity, that needs explaining. Poverty is automatic, but prosperity requires many things – none of which is equally distributed around the world or even within a given society. Geographic settings are radically different, both among nations and within nations. So are demographic differences, with some nations and groups having a median age over 40 and others having a median age under 20. This means that some groups have several times as much adult work experience as others.

Cultures are also radically different in many ways. As distinguished economic historian David S. Landes put it, “The world has never been a level playing field.” But which has a better track record of helping the less fortunate – fighting for a bigger slice of the economic pie, or producing a bigger pie?

In 1900, only 3 percent of American homes had electric lights but more than 99 percent had them before the end of the century. Infant mortality rates were 165 per thousand in 1900 and 7 per thousand by 1997. By 2001, most Americans living below the official poverty line had central air conditioning, a motor vehicle, cable television with multiple TV sets, and other amenities.

A scholar specializing in the study of Latin America said that the official poverty level in the United States is the upper middle class in Mexico. The much criticized market economy of the United States has done far more for the poor than the ideology of the left.

Pope Francis’ own native Argentina was once among the leading economies of the world, before it was ruined by the kind of ideological notions he is now promoting around the world.
